

Psych Recovery Coach

Service Overview

Space to reflect. Support to move forward.

I'm Edward, an independent Psychosocial Recovery Coach providing NDIS support to people living with psychosocial disability.

I work one-on-one with self-managed and plan-managed participants to build confidence, strengthen daily living skills, navigate services, and move toward goals that matter to them at a pace that feels sustainable.

Who I Support

- Adults with a primary diagnosis of psychosocial disability due to mental health conditions
- NDIS participants seeking support to understand their plan, access services, and work toward personal recovery goals
- Individuals wanting a recovery-oriented, person-led approach grounded in empathy and lived understanding

What I Do

- Help you understand your NDIS plan and use your funding effectively
- Support you to identify strengths, values, and personal goals
- Build skills for daily living, community connection, and self-advocacy
- Assist with decision-making, budgeting, and accessing housing, employment, or training
- Provide coaching that is informed by lived experience and focused on your vision of recovery

What I Don't Do

- Crisis intervention or clinical therapy
- Deliver Core supports (e.g. personal care, transport) as part of a Recovery Coaching role
- Provide Recovery Coaching to participants who are not self-managed or plan-managed

Additional Support Options

I offer limited support work (Core supports) as a separate service. I do not provide Core supports and Recovery Coaching concurrently to the same participant.
